THE OLD YEAR.

"Old Year—Old Year—and whither away, Whither away so fast? With the dying light of the dying day.
The wild, where dance of the shadows gray,
And mosn of the winter blast?" And the Old Year answered, grave and s'ow-"To the Judge of the hearts of men I go, Till the searching giance of His eye shall see The record their lives have given to me ;-Pa sloo or principle, sorrow or absine.
The gay fields of pleasure, the steep paths of fame,
In light or in shadow, in virtue or crime. The footprints they've marked on the pathway time."

"Old Year-Old Year-and how does it read, This record of long ago ?
In the garden of life is it flower or weed?
Does the flame of its memories inger to feed An altor of joy or wee!"
And the Old Year answered, sweet and clear:
"Flower and weed have I garnered here;
Each as it ripened such blossoming here,
As the weeds that were dropped in the furrows before. I cannot reap where I plough and sow— Only the harvests of others way show; Ask of thesets if the false or the trun Weight down the scale of the balance for you."

"Old Year-Old Year-and why do you weep, "Old Year—Old Year—and why do you weep,
Waapped in your mande din; !
What are thy m mories, sombre and deep,
Silently, allently waking from sloep!
Where are thy phantoms dim!"
And the Old Year anawered, and at last:
"I weep for the graver of the buried met;
For promises grushed to their brightest bloom,
For intering wasted, and strong life doed
I've purposes conquered, and bright hoose field—
Many—sow many—are shading my eight,
Floating away in the darkness to dight!"

"Old Year—Old Year—and why do you rise, God's shirit open your brow! Piereing the clouds of the Fature's skies, Looking beyond with triumphaset eyes— What do you read there now!" And the Old Year maswered, proud and high: And the tist have that cannot die;
A spirit of right that no wrong can erush,
A whisper of hope that no lear can but h;
A power aroused in the strong hearts of men,
That never can wink into imagour agalo— A flame that shall make all the future time bright,
